

Upscale Furniture Consignment Gallery

Where class and vintage meet... with prices that can't be beat!

20% Off ANY PURCHASE

From Upscale Furniture Consignment Gallery. Offers cannot be combined. Not applicable to merchandise from Marketplace vendors. Expires 11/22/17.

And introducing the new...

Upscale MARKETPLACE

LOCAL VENDORS • ARTISANS • BOUTIQUES CRAFTS • MINI POP-UPS • & MORE!

8845 SW 132nd Street

Miami, FL 33176 • 305-491-5651

www.UpscaleFurnitureConsignmentGallery.com

70190600F734

columns

the mindful divorcée

by Debbie Martinez, Divorce Coach

Thoughts on Divorce and the Holidays

WELL, IT'S THAT TIME OF YEAR NEWLY DIVORCED AND SINGLE PEOPLE DREAD, the holidays. What used to be a joyous time of year has turned into, "I just can't wait to get through it" time of year. I get it, as I have been there myself, but I am also going to tell you, if you approach the holidays with a different attitude and a plan, believe it or not, you can actually not just get through it but enjoy the season.

First, there is the issue of two households. Communication between you and your ex is just as important as between you and your children. Try to work out a holiday schedule that works for the children so they can spend equal time with both parents. Depending on their ages, involve them in holiday decisions as it's about what is important for them. Take the time to listen to what they are saying and their feelings, especially if this is the first holiday as a separated family.

Now, let's talk about presents, as this is a minefield to navigate. Children want to give and please so try (keyword) not to take it personally when they come to you and ask for money to buy your ex's girlfriend/boyfriend a present. Huge pill to swallow, I know, and depending on the age it can be handled a couple of ways. If the child is older, you can explain to him/her that now that you are divorced, you will pay for presents on your side and that their dad will pay for presents on his side. If the child is young, well, that's a bullet you will have to take. Putting your children's feelings first just might be the best present you can give yourself.

Next on the agenda is you. Being without your children during the holidays when you have been used to having them for all the festivities is gut wrenching to think about but times have changed and you need to change with them. The more you fight this change, the harder it will be so acceptance and planning is key. This is a transition for everyone so give it some clear thought not based on raw emotion.

Have a plan in place as to what you will do during the times that the children are at your ex's. Don't wait until the front door shuts behind your children and you're in tears to figure out what you are going to do. Now is the perfect time to pamper yourself and you can do it guilt-free, as you will not feel like you are taking time away from your children. On another note, you can't stifle your emotions but don't show your tears in front of the children. Let them enjoy the holidays and not feel guilty about spending time with the other parent. Prepare yourself to hear about the other's home and what they did and the presents they received. Smile as you pour yourself a glass of wine.

Be in the present moment, literally. Do not allow your mind to wander to past holidays or what was. Be in the moment and find something to be grateful for in that moment. Don't focus on the fact that you are alone or that your children are at your ex's. Focus on what you have planned out for yourself and focus on the New Year and the new opportunities that await you.

Happiness is a choice and yes, you can be happy during the holidays even when you are divorced or unattached. It's up to you.

Debbie Martinez, MA is a certified, mindful life coach specializing in divorce (aka: heartbreak coach). She professionally coaches clients on how to avoid the breakup backlash and live better, not bitter. As a Florida Supreme Court Certified Family Mediator trained in collaborative divorce, Debbie gives clients the tools they need to successfully untie the knot and stand strong in the wake of adversity. She brings her formal training and life experience into her coaching practice to empower and educate clients through their divorce journey and onto new beginnings. You can contact Debbie at debbie@transformationthrudivorce.com.